University of San Francisco: Firsts, Facts, Honors, and Achievements

Jesuit Catholic Tradition

- USF's Vision, Mission, and Values Statement, approved by the Board of Trustees on September 11, 2001, is premised on Jesuit ideals stretching back to the founding of the Society of Jesus in 1540, a Catholic order that established the largest network of schools in the history of the world. The statement proclaims in its opening paragraph "The University of San Francisco will be internationally recognized as a premier Jesuit Catholic, urban University with a global perspective that educates leaders who will fashion a more humane and just world." This mission, to "educate minds and hearts to change the world," permeates all aspects of the institution, including student learning, faculty research, curriculum design, program and degree offerings, publications, and a host of institutional features.
- St. Ignatius Church and College, the antecedent of USF, provided social services to the people of San Francisco in hospitals, schools, homeless shelters, soup kitchens, and prisons, from its earliest years. For example, the first Catholic Chaplain, Michael Accolti, S.J., to San Quentin Prison in 1867 was from St. Ignatius Church and College, and the USF Jesuit Community has had a Catholic Chaplain at that prison ever since. USF students currently work with inmates at San Quentin Prison on social justice issues, through the San Quentin Trust Alliance.
- From 1861 to 1889, the Jesuit Community of St. Ignatius Church and College included James Bouchard, S.J, the first Native American ordained to the Catholic priesthood in the United States. Fr. Bouchard was crucial for the success of the church and college. He gave sermons, organized social service support groups of Catholic laypersons, and recruited students for the college. In 2012, St. Ignatius Church is a thriving and active parish that serves 1,200 families and that affords USF students, faculty, staff, and alumni an opportunity to be fully integrated into the life and faith of the Catholic Church.
- USF currently enrolls 9,837 undergraduate and graduate students representing all faiths. In the fall of 2011, 38.5 percent of USF's undergraduates were Catholic.
- In the Catholic tradition, University Ministry is committed to faith development and to working with people of all religious backgrounds who seek to develop their spiritual lives. University Ministry provides opportunities for retreats, worship, resident ministry, social justice programs, one-on-one spiritual direction, inter-denominational Christian fellowship and community, and Catholic initiation and sacramental preparation.
- University Ministry offers an international social justice program, the Arrupe Immersion Experience (named after the late Superior General of the Jesuits) in which students build homes, deliver meals to the sick, and seek to learn by living in poverty areas, including in Guatemala and in Tijuana, Mexico. In Peru, students worked with street children and youths to help find them food and shelter and to defend their rights. In Belize, USF students helped disadvantaged middle-school students arrive at high school with computer literacy skills. In the Dominican Republic, students learned about and reflected on the plight of the Haitian refugee population.
- The Institute for Catholic Educational Leadership (ICEL), launched in 1976 in the School of Education, was one of the first higher education programs in the nation that coordinated academic offerings and community service programming for educators in Catholic and private education. The institute offers a doctorate and a master's degree in Catholic School Leadership, community service symposia and conferences, workshops for diocesan teachers and administrators, and various research initiatives. ICEL's mission is to offer scholarly educational programming for Catholic and private school personnel, to build community among students and faculty who pray together and serve others, and to prepare highly competent and dedicated educators for Catholic and private schools. During the 2011-2012 academic year, 34 students worked on graduate degrees in Catholic Education leadership and teaching through the School of Education.
- Founded in 1976, the Saint Ignatius Institute was designed to provide an integrated curriculum based on the Great Books and authors of Western Civilization, with an emphasis on works in the Catholic tradition. Students in the Saint Ignatius Institute have the option to live together in the same residence hall, engage in off-campus outings, community service, spiritual retreats, and study abroad opportunities. In the fall of 2010, there were 150 students in the Saint Ignatius Institute.
- In 2004, Ralph and Joan Lane gave a million dollar gift to USF to endow a Center for Catholic Studies and Social Thought to be named in their honor. The center focuses on the insights of Catholic social thought on contemporary social problems and advances the scholarship and application of the Catholic intellectual tradition in the Church and society. The family of former USF president and current chancellor, John Lo Schiavo, S.J., endowed a chair at the center, named for Joseph and Anna Lo Schiavo. The center sponsors academic programs, research, conferences, seminars, and public lectures that enrich the Jesuit Catholic identity of USF and engages and develops Catholic social thought for the Church, the city, and the world. The Lane Center sponsored a faculty and staff immersion trip during the summer of 2009 to El Salvador to create greater understanding of those who live vastly different lives than most Americans, helping to foster USF's mission to educate students to create a more humane and just world.

- In 2007, the University of San Francisco received the Fr. Alfred Boeddeker Award from the St. Anthony Foundation of San Francisco for its commitment to serving the community and to educating students about responsible citizenship. This annual award is the only one given by the St. Anthony Foundation. The foundation provides the poor with a variety of services, including shelter, housing, meals, medical care, clothing and furniture, and rehabilitation services. USF's ongoing support, said St. Anthony's leaders in giving the award, has made those programs better while teaching students about relevant issues and how to become advocates for change.
- After the Devastating Earthquake in Haiti in January 2010, the USF community and more than 35 local businesses raised over $18,000, which was donated to the Jesuit Refugee Service/USA. The Fundraiser was followed up by a half-day teach-in in April that provided a review of the situation facing the Haitian people and featured national speakers on the humanitarian response, medical and legal systems, and Haitian culture.
- The University Ministry partnered with the San Francisco Regional Council in 2010 to aid Urban Sprouts to plant a garden at the Ida B. Wells School in San Francisco.
- Charles Geschke, co-founder of Adobe Systems, was installed as the Inaugural Rossi Chair Holder in March 2010 to serve as a mentor to students and faculty, illustrating that high achievement in business and in society stems from a solid foundation of faith and ethics.
- USF President Stephen A. Privett, S.J. was chosen in July 2010 to serve as the new chair of the California Campus Compact, a coalition of leading universities and colleges that works to advance civic engagement and community engagement on their campuses.
- In July 2010, USF was rated by the Chronicle of Higher Education as one of 97 of the nation's great colleges to work for, based on employee responses gathered at 275 schools.
- The USF community completed a successful Thanksgiving Food Drive that raised more than $15,000 for families in the Western Addition of San Francisco, an increase of several thousand dollars from 2010. More than 100 USF volunteers packaged and distributed food boxes for families purchased from the money raised.
- In 2010 USF was ranked among the top 100 universities in the nation for civic engagement in a study titled "Saviors of Our Cities: Survey of Best College and University Civic Partnerships," by Westfield State College. USF was one of only seven Jesuit universities recognized among the more than 3,000 schools surveyed. The rankings highlight the positive impact that colleges and universities have on their urban communities, including revitalization, cultural renewal, economics, community service, and development.
- For the sixth straight year, USF was named to the President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll by the Corporation for National and Community Service. This honor highlights USF students' exemplary service on issues ranging from poverty and homelessness, to environmental justice. Honorees are chosen on the basis of the scope and impact of service projects, percentage of students participating in service activities, and the extent to which the school offers academic service-learning courses.
- On February 7, 2012 USF was chosen by Catholic Relief Services (CRS), the official international relief and development agency of the Catholic Church in the U.S., as one of three Catholic universities in the U.S., and the only Jesuit university, to be part of Scholars in Global Solidarity. This program aims to develop student solidarity, faculty expertise, and course curriculum for marginalized communities around the world. USF was selected for its demonstrated leadership and excellence in applying Catholic social teaching to its social justice mission and for its focus on addressing the causes of poverty. As an expression of this partnership, USF President Stephen Privett, S.J., was part of a mid-January CRS-sponsored delegation for Catholic university presidents to Rwanda and Burundi.
- USF was selected as one of five universities in the nation to receive the 2012 Higher Education Civic Engagement Award from the Washington Center for Internships and Academic Seminars. USF was recognized for its contributions to the community, leadership and professional achievement, and enrichment of student learning. Fr. Privett will be recognized at the Washington Center's Award Gala on October 1, and USF will receive a $20,000 scholarship to support student participation in the Center's programs.

San Francisco Location

- USF, then known as St. Ignatius Academy, was the first institution of higher education in the City of San Francisco and the third in the State of California, when it opened its doors on October 15, 1855.
- USF has had four locations in San Francisco since its founding: the first was on Market Street, between 4th and 5th Streets, the current site of the Westfield Shopping Centre; the second was on the corner of Van Ness Avenue and Hayes Street, the current location of the Louise M. Davies Symphony Hall; the third was on the corner of Hayes and Shrader Streets, the location of one of the clinics of the St. Mary's Medical Center; and the current hilltop campus, 55 finely landscaped acres, two blocks from Golden Gate Park, with views of the Pacific Ocean to the West and downtown San Francisco to the East.
- St. Ignatius College, as USF was then known, was the first institution in the nation to stage a public demonstration of electric light. Physics Professor Joseph Neri, S.J., gave that demonstration in 1874 to an amazed crowd of San Franciscans. Fr. Neri literally brought electric light to the City of San Francisco.
- Completed by the Jesuits in 1914, St. Ignatius Church on the USF campus was the largest church in San Francisco until 1971, when St. Mary's Cathedral was built. With its lofty 213-foot tall spires, St. Ignatius Church was such a prominent landmark that it was included on maritime navigational maps. The church's 6,000-pound bell was cast in Sheffield, England, in 1859, and is the oldest church bell in constant service in San Francisco. During World War II, the Church spires were the last San Francisco structures seen by servicemen as they sailed into the Western Pacific, and the first they saw when they sailed back into San Francisco Bay.
- In 1930, at the urging of several alumni, and with the strong support of the mayor of San Francisco, St. Ignatius College took on the name of the city, and became the University of San Francisco.
- USF was a pioneer in creating community based learning opportunities in San Francisco, when in 1963, sociology professor Ralph Lane developed the Student Western Addition Project (SWAP), dedicated to providing health care assistance, tutoring, and neighborhood services. By 1969, more than 250 students were involved in the project.
- Since its first broadcast in 1977, KUSF-FM, the university's radio station, has received numerous awards from a variety of individuals and organizations, including four certificates of honor from the San Francisco Board of Supervisors. KUSF-FM has been named as the best radio station in the San Francisco Bay Area by local media and has been designated the best college radio station in the nation by several publications.
- Since its opening in 1989, USF's Koret Health and Recreation Center has been named as the best gym in San Francisco by almost every fitness magazine and newspaper in the region. Its Olympic-size pool is the largest indoor pool in Northern California. The entrance to the Center is graced by a statue of Jesse Owens, the great African American athlete who won four gold medals at the 1936 Olympic games in Germany.
- As of November 2011, USF was the fifteenth largest employer in the city and county of San Francisco, with 1,222 full-time and 755 part-time employees, including faculty, administrators, and staff.
- In 1997, USF, through its Office of Academic and Enrollment Services, and the School of Education, was one of the first institutions of higher education in the nation to participate in America Reads, a federal program that brings USF students into the community to assist disadvantaged elementary school children with learning how to read. This engagement with young children, families, and teachers gives university students an opportunity to observe how education makes a difference in young learners' lives, trains students to teach reading, and provides education experience for students who seek a career in teaching. USF collaborated with San Francisco Unified School District elementary schools, selected Catholic elementary schools, and nonprofit children's centers. Approximately 50 USF students and 400 elementary school students during the regular sessions of the academic year participate in the program.
- During the 2010-2011 academic year, USF students engaged in 331,352 hours of community service in San Francisco. In the College of Arts and Sciences, through the Leo T. McCarthy Center for Public Service and the Common Good, 2,943 students engaged in service learning and internships with more than 200 community partners. USF is one of the few national universities that requires all undergraduates to complete a service-learning course to graduate.
- USF was in the forefront of "going green" in San Francisco in 2009, with solar panels on most of its buildings, a co-generational plant, proactive water conservation, the use of biodegradable cleaning products, a living-learning community of students committed to organic gardening, and a recycling and composting program that finished 5th in national competition.

- The School of Nursing and Health Professions annually sends more than 800 students throughout the city for clinical experiences and volunteer work.
- The School of Management sponsors programs for small businesses in low-income neighborhoods of San Francisco, and the Gellert Foundation Family Business Center helps to provide enterprise housing (business and living arrangement combined) for small businesses.
- The School of Education, through its Upward Bound Project, prepares disadvantaged high school students in San Francisco for successfully entering and completing college, while the TEAMS Project helps prepare teachers of color to serve in San Francisco's schools.
- In the School of Law, more than 100 students, faculty, and staff annually provide volunteer legal services to numerous community agencies, and each year, the Street Law Project reaches nearly 2,200 predominately inner-city high school and middle school students with "street law" courses, taught by USF law students under faculty supervision.
- USF was recognized by the Sierra Club as one of the "coolest" universities in the United States, ranking 56th out of 118 schools, based on environmental practices, green initiatives, and caliber of sustainability-oriented education. USF also received an A- grade on the Sustainability Report Card for 2011, issued by the Sustainable Endowment Foundation.
- On August 2, 2012 USF purchased the historic Folger Building at 101 Howard Street in downtown San Francisco. Listed on the National Registry of Historic Places, and located within walking distance of where USF first opened its doors in 1855 on Market Street, purchase of the Folger Building marks a return to the university's origins in downtown San Francisco. In addition to expanding USF's classroom space, which is near capacity on the Hilltop campus, the building will raise the university's profile and enhance its ties to San Francisco's legal, financial, and business communities.

Outstanding Academic Quality

- In 1950, USF was one of the first universities in the Western United States to be accredited by the Western College Association, the forerunner of the Western Association of Schools and Colleges. This accreditation has been reaffirmed repeatedly over the past six decades.
- In 1953, USF's College of Business Administration, now the School of Management, became one of a small number of schools to be nationally accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), a distinct and superior accreditation it has maintained to this day.
- Arthur Furst, USF Professor of Chemistry from 1947 to 1981, was one of the first scientists in the world to develop an effective chemotherapy drug that could be given orally to fight cancer. He pioneered the field of toxicology, published scores of scientific papers, brought millions of federal dollars to USF, and received numerous awards for his work.
- USF Physics Professor Eugene Benton is internationally known for his pioneering experiments on the detection of radiation in outer space and from earth-bound particle accelerators. Professor Benton's experimental devices were on every manned and unmanned NASA mission, from 1965 to 2001, and he also led joint U.S.–Russian experiments on the effects of long-term space radiation on humans aboard the Russian Space Station Mir, from 1986 to 2001. Professor Benton obtained several large NASA grants to support his research, received numerous awards for his work, published a host of scholarly papers, and was invited to lecture at professional conferences throughout the world.
- When Alfred and Hanna Fromm founded the Fromm Institute for Lifelong Learning at USF in 1976, it was only the third program in the nation to offer academic programming for retirees. Twenty-seven years later, the Friends of the Fromm Institute raised $10 million for USF to guarantee that Alfred and Hanna's vision will always be part of USF.
- In 1977, Melvin Swig, a leading San Francisco businessman, developer, and philanthropist, funded the Swig Judaic Studies Program at USF. The USF Board of Trustees invited Mr. Swig to join the board, he accepted the board's offer, and was named board chairman in 1985. The Swig Judaic Studies Program and the Swig Chair, in the College of Arts and Sciences, were among the first such Judaic Studies programs at any American Catholic university.

- In 1986, USF launched one of the nation's first master's degrees in non-profit administration. Since then, hundreds of leaders in the non-profit sector have graduated from the program.
- Developed in 1988, the Center for the Pacific Rim's Master of Arts in Asia Pacific Studies, in the College of Arts and Sciences, was the first evening program of its kind in the United States to serve working professionals.
- In 1993, USF's School of Education became the first school in the state to offer an alternative learning specialist (LH) credential approved by the California Commission on Teacher Credentialing. The program enabled students to earn the LH credential in one year while teaching in a special education classroom with full pay. This innovative program represented a collaborative effort between USF and Bay Area school districts.
- From 1996 to 2011, 66.3 percent of USF students who went through the USF Pre-Professional Health Committee were successful in gaining admittance to medical school, whereas nationally the acceptance rate during this period was 41.4 percent.
- USF's School of Nursing received approval in 2007 to offer the doctorate of nursing practice (DNP) degree, making USF the first university in California to offer this advanced degree for working nurses.
- In 2009, USF's School of Education became the first in the nation to offer an emphasis in human rights for masters and doctoral education.
- The California bar examination passage rate for USF law students was 74.0 percent for first-time takers in July 2011; ranked fourteenth in passage rates amongst the ABA approved law school in the State of California.
- According to the Hirsch Index, as of December 2008, USF faculty members (including administrators with faculty appointments) had published 6,107 books and scholarly articles, and were cited in 48,653 additional publications.
- Since its inception in 1912, the USF School of Law has witnessed 270 of its graduates become state or federal judges.
- USF counts among its alumni three San Francisco mayors (James Phelan, John Shelley, Frank Jordan) one United States Senator (James Phelan), three members of the United States House of Representatives (John Burton, John Shelley, Lynn Woolsey), four California Supreme Court Justices (Matt Sullivan, Jeremiah Sullivan, Raymond Sullivan, Ming Chin) a California Lieutenant Governor Leo T. McCarthy), the undersecretaries for the U.S. Department of Education (Martha Kanter) and for the Smithsonian Institute (Sheila Burke), a former White House Press Secretary (Pierre Salinger), two Pulitzer Prize winners (Joseph Rosenthal, Foster Church), a winner of the National Humanities Medal (Kevin Starr), two recipients of the MacArthur "Genius" award (Tommie Lindsey, Joseph Marshall, Jr.), three Olympic Medalists (Ollie Matson, Bill Russell, K.C. Jones), a number of athletes in their respective halls of fame, many public servants, countless priests and religious, numerous police and fire chiefs, corporate CEO's, and the former president of Peru (Alejandro Toledo).
- Among USF's living alumni, there are more than 4,000 teachers, 1,500 educational administrators, 660 engineers, 3,400 attorneys, 400 college professors, 600 elected and non-elected government officials, 700 accountants, 1,400 health care providers, 2,100 nurses, 390 physicians, 160 dentists, and 300 social workers.
- On the May 2012 alumni survey, 93% of USF's alumni said they were satisfied with their academic experiences at the school, 90% reported that their USF experiences helped prepare them for their first job, and 93% said they would recommend USF to others.
- USF ranks in the top 15% of all colleges, universities and trade schools nationwide by G.I. Magazine for being a Military Friendly School in 2012 and being committed to educating our nation's most deserving heroes.
- In October 2009, the Chronicle of Higher Education listed USF as among the top 22 national universities in producing Fulbright scholars in 2009-2010. USF tied for 10th place on the list having four of its faculty members so honored.
- On the May 2012 graduating student survey, 88 percent of surveyed students, "strongly agreed" or "agreed" with the following statement: "Overall, I was satisfied with my USF education." Likewise, 96.5 percent of those surveyed "strongly agreed" or "agreed" that, "my instructors took an active interest in my learning." The overall satisfaction with major courses was also high at 91.6 percent.
- In 2012, the Princeton Review named USF as one of the 120 Best Western Colleges, and ranked San Francisco as the 6th on its list of Great College Towns.
- In March 2010, the Western Association of School and Colleges (WASC) reaffirmed USF's accreditation for 10 years, explicitly commending the all-pervasive impact of the school's mission.
- USF was listed as a Tier One National University in the 2012 U.S. News & World Report, and was tied for 11th - place in undergraduate student ethnic diversity among 280 national universities.

- USF's Masagung Graduate School of Management was named 10th in the 2012 edition of the Princeton Review Annual Best Business Schools Guidebook. The Princeton Review collected opinions of more than 19,000 students at AACSB accredited MBA programs around the world, as well as statistical information on MBA programs in order to give the readers the widest possible base of information for selecting the right business school.
- On February 11, 2011 USF was included among nine schools of California in the Colleges of Distinction list, which provides students, counselors, and parents with information about schools that excel in four areas: engaged students, great teaching, vibrant communities, and successful outcomes.

Diversity

- Most American institutions of higher education partially reflect the nation's immigration experience, during the nineteenth century; however, Saint Ignatius College was the immigration experience. The school was founded by Italian Jesuit immigrants, the first seven presidents of the college were all Jesuit immigrants, most of the faculty members were either Italian Jesuits or lay faculty from Ireland, and virtually all of the students during its first decades were first- or second-generation Irish or Italian Catholics, to be joined by the end of the 19th century by students of German, French, and Mexican ancestry.
- At a time when anti-Asian sentiment was widespread in California and most of the nation, Chan C. Wing was one of 39 students in the first class in USF's School of Law, which began in September 1912. In 1918, Mr. Wing became the first Asian American to be admitted to the bar in California history.
- In 1929, the Filipino Ignatians was founded at St. Ignatius College, the first of many ethnically diverse student organizations at the school. There are currently 20 student clubs and organizations at USF that highlight the university's ethnic and cultural diversity.
- In 1930, USF fielded one of the first integrated football teams in the history of intercollegiate athletics. Isaiah Fletcher, an African American, was a starting tackle on that team, the first of many African Americans to play on a varsity intercollegiate team for USF, decades before most universities began to integrate their teams or their campuses.
- With its internationally diverse student-athletes, including an exchange student from Nigeria (Olufunmi Osibogun), the USF soccer team tied Penn State in the first intercollegiate soccer bowl game in the United States in 1950. USF soccer teams subsequently won four national championships (1966, 1975, 1976, and 1980) and had a coach, Steve Negroesco, who is the all-time leader among NCAA soccer coaches in games won, with 544 victories over 39 seasons.
- USF fielded a 1951 football team that saw more of its starting players drafted directly into the National Football League (9), more who eventually played in the NFL Pro Bowl (5), and more who were inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame (3), than any one team in the history of intercollegiate football. The team did not play in any post-season bowl games, however, because of racism directed at its two starting African American players, Ollie Matson and Burl Toler, and the team's unwillingness to accede to that racism.
- During the 1954-1955 season, the USF basketball team became the first major college or university basketball team to win a NCAA national title with three African American players (Bill Russell, K.C. Jones, and Hal Perry) among its five starters. The team won a second national championship the following year, and over the course of three seasons, it set an NCAA record of 60 consecutive victories that stood until the 1970s.
- A 2006 study by the American Association of University Professors showed that 57.6 percent of the tenure-track positions at USF were held by women and 42.4 percent were held by men. At the national level, only six doctoral institutions out of 221 had a higher percentage of women on tenure-track than did USF.
- USF was tied for 11th place in undergraduate student ethnic diversity among 280 national universities in the 2012 issue of U.S. News & World Report.
- For the entire USF undergraduate and graduate student population in the fall of 2011, 20.6 percent were Asian, 4.8 percent African American, 15.6 percent Latino, 12.0 percent international, and 40.6 percent White.
- Among the respondents to the May 2012 graduating student survey, 95 percent felt that USF classes helped them to gain deeper understanding of the value, ideas, and perspectives of people from different racial or ethnic background.
- In March 2010, Jennifer E. Turpin, former dean of the USF College of Arts and Sciences, was selected as the first female provost and academic vice president in the history of the university.

- In 2011, The School of Law Student Bar Association (SBA) was presented with the Henry J. Ramsey, Jr. Diversity Award by the American Bar Association (ABA), recognizing the SBA's excellence in improving diversity advancement within the legal profession. The award is presented annually to a student, faculty, administrator, or student association from an ABA-approved law school.

Global Perspective

- Among USF's alumni, 322 have joined the Peace Corps since that agency was established in 1961, placing USF in the top 25 among institutions of comparable size regarding the number of Peace Corps Volunteers.
- Reflective of USF's mission and international focus, the university has hosted, honored, and given public speaking forums to 12 Nobel Peace Prize Laureates, including Bishop Desmond Tutu from South Africa; the Dalai Lama from Tibet; Kim Dae-jung from Korea; and Shirin Ebadi, the first Muslim woman and first Iranian to receive that award.
- Established in 1999, the Center for Law and Global Justice in the USF School of Law, has engaged in human rights internships in El Salvador, Brazil, and at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva; developed judicial training programs in Vietnam; engaged in anti-corruption work in the Philippines and in Equatorial Africa; worked on issues related to Haitian refugees in the Dominican Republic; and promoted legal education, human rights, economic development and rule-of-law projects in Cambodia, Indonesia, and East Timor. The Center has developed two justice centers for legal aid in Cape Town, South Africa; trained judges in Vietnam; and produced 31 volumes of legal texts for Cambodia.
- In 2006, USF's long-standing commitment to social justice in the local and global community was recognized by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which designated USF as one of just 76 community engaged colleges and universities in the nation. In awarding the classification, the Carnegie Foundation said that USF's community engagement programs were "exemplary" and that the university demonstrated an "excellent alignment between mission, culture, leadership, resources, and practices that support dynamic and noteworthy community engagement."
- USF has 98,227 alumni living in all 50 states, 6 United States territories, and 119 countries.
- During the 2010-2011 academic year, 526 USF students earned academic credit in USF-sponsored study abroad, exchange, intern, or social justice programs, or studied abroad through cooperative arrangements with other American universities or organizations. An additional 137 USF students participated in non-credit bearing volunteer, intern, leadership, or service learning international programs, for a total of 552 students.
- During the Fall 2011, 1180 undergraduate and graduate international students from 77 foreign countries studied at USF, comprising 12.0 percent of the total student population.
- USF's commitment to global social justice appears in internships and immersion programs around the world. Students built a library for AIDS orphans in Zambia and houses in Puebla, Mexico, and in Nicaragua. Students traveled to Thailand and to Uganda to understand human trafficking and returned to create a large grassroots movement to abolish modern human slavery and trafficking abroad and in the United States. Through Community Connections, students and faculty provide computer support to schools in developing countries, including six immersion trips to Tacna, Peru, helping students and teachers to bridge the digital divide. For eight years, USF nursing students and faculty have traveled to a Guatemalan village to enhance the health care and the lives of mothers, their infants, and the community.
- In 2010, USF was named one of five colleges nationally, and the only one on the west coast, to win the Senator Paul Simon Award for Campus Internationalization by NAFSA. The award is given each year by NAFSA. Through the Senator Paul Simon Award, NAFSA recognizes universities that demonstrate a conscious effort to integrate international, intercultural, and global dimensions into their education.

USF College of Arts and Sciences: Firsts, Facts, Honors, and Achievements

1925–2000

- In 1925, the departments of arts, sciences, and philosophy were officially integrated into the College of Arts and Sciences.
- Hubert Flynn, S.J., was named the first dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. He served in that capacity from 1925 to 1934, a period during which student enrollment in the college increased from 98 to 676.
- P. Carlo Rossi, S.J., professor of languages from 1940 to 1975, helped build the modern languages department in the College of Arts and Sciences during the postwar years. In 1949, he was awarded the Order of the Southern Cross for furthering cultural relations between Brazil and the United States.
- Under the leadership of Alexis Mei, S.J., the first postwar dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, enrollment increased in the college from 86 students in the spring of 1945 to 1062 students by the fall of 1948, out of a total of 3044 students at USF.
- Arthur Furst, professor of chemistry from 1947 to 1981, was one of the first scientists in the world to develop an effective chemotherapy drug that could be taken orally to fight cancer. He pioneered the field of toxicology, published scores of scientific papers, brought millions of federal dollars to USF, received numerous awards for his work, and founded the Institute for Chemical Biology.
- Founded in 1961, the Institute of Chemical Biology achieved national and international acclaim for its cutting-edge research in areas including the causes of cancer, toxicology, and environmental problems. More than 230 scientific publications and technical reports were generated by USF science faculty working out of the institute, typically with the assistance of undergraduate and graduate students, who were frequently cited as co-authors in scientific publications. Many of the students who worked on projects in the institute went on to become university professors, researchers, and medical doctors. The research of the institute was supported by millions of dollars from government contracts and grants and gifts from private foundations and corporations.
- USF was a pioneer in creating community based learning opportunities in San Francisco, when in 1963, sociology professor Ralph Lane developed the Student Western Addition Project (SWAP), dedicated to providing health care assistance, tutoring, and neighborhood services. By 1969, more than 250 students were involved in the project.
- In the spring of 1964, the College of Arts and Sciences launched the Honors Programs in the Humanities. The program was designed for academically outstanding students, and it currently includes a series of seminars, limited to 15 students, beginning in the freshman year, which focus on the study of Western European thought.
- USF Physics Professor Eugene Benton is internationally known for his pioneering experiments on the detection of radiation in outer space and from earth-bound particle accelerators. Professor Benton's experimental devices were on every manned and unmanned NASA mission, beginning in 1965, and he also led joint U.S.-Russian experiments on the effects of long-term space radiation on humans aboard the Russian Space Station Mir, from 1986 to 2001. Professor Benton obtained several large NASA grants to support his research, received numerous awards for his work, published a host of scholarly papers, and was invited to lecture at professional conferences throughout the world.
- The Bachelor of Science in Computer Science, initiated in 1966, was the first computer science bachelor's degree offered at any school on the West Coast. In May 1970, 10 USF students received their B.S. degree in computer science, the first group of students in the United States to be awarded this degree. Today's computer science students obtain hands-on experience through the department's laboratories, a 128-node parallel computing cluster, and multimedia classrooms, including a computer classroom in the Harney Science Center. This facility, which opened in the fall of 2002, was a gift of USF alumnus Alfred Chuang and was named after a professor of computer science, Michael Kudlick, who inspired Mr. Chuang during his student days at USF.
- Since its first broadcast in 1977, KUSF-FM, the university's radio station, has received numerous awards from a variety of individuals and organizations, including four certificates of honor from the San Francisco Board of Supervisors. KUSF-FM has been named as the best radio station in the San Francisco Bay Area by local media and has been designated the best college radio station in the nation by several publications.

- The Swig Judaic Studies began in 1977 due to a major gift from Melvin Swig, businessman and philanthropist, who later chaired the USF Board of Trustees. The program brought world renowned scholars to USF, including Nobel prize recipients Saul Bellow and Ellie Wiesel; Erik Erikson, winner of the Pulitzer and National Book awards; and Abba Eban, ambassador from Israel. It offered a variety of courses in Judaica through the department of theology and religious studies; sponsored numerous community events, lectures, and seminars; and cooperated with various Jewish organizations in the Bay Area for educational programming.
- The Davies Forum was organized and planned in the fall of 1981 by administrators and faculty in the College of Arts and Sciences. It was initially underwritten by a $1 million endowment from the noted San Francisco philanthropist Louise M. Davies, and was named in her honor. Since its inception, the Davies Forum has included a semester long seminar for advanced undergraduate students, taught by a USF professor, and a public lecture given by a national or international leader, designated as a Davies Fellow. The general theme of the Davies Forum is “A Search for Values in Contemporary America.”
- In 1987, USF President John Lo Schiavo, S.J., spearheaded an effort to develop a Center for the Pacific Rim in the College of Arts and Sciences. Barbara Bundy was chosen to be the Center’s first executive director. The Center currently administers graduate and undergraduate interdisciplinary Pacific Rim studies programs, and sponsors lectures, seminars, conferences, and other special outreach activities for the community. The Center developed the Master of Arts in Asia Pacific Studies, the first evening program of its kind in the United States to serve working professionals. It includes multidisciplinary coursework in the history, philosophy, politics, religions, literature, arts, societies, cultures, and economics of China, Japan, and Korea in the broader context of the Pacific Rim.
- Roberta Johnson, professor of politics, was awarded a Fulbright Grant in 1991 to present lectures in China, Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, and Indonesia on a variety of topics including the American Presidency, Sexual Harassment, and Women’s Studies.
- In 1995, mathematics professor Tristan Needham received the prestigious Carl B. Allendoerfer Award for his article in Mathematics Magazine on the “Geometry of Harmonic Functions,” derived from a chapter in his book, Visual Complex Analysis, published by Oxford University Press. The award, named after a distinguished University of Washington mathematician and former president of the Mathematical Association of America, reflected a growing school of thought in the mathematical world emphasizing visualization (geometry) rather than strictly calculations or computations as a way of understanding advanced mathematical concepts.

- The Leo T. McCarthy Center for Public Service and the Common Good, in the College of Arts and Sciences, was established in 2001 through major gifts from Leo T. McCarthy, USF graduate and former Lieutenant Governor of California; Ralph Lane, emeritus USF faculty member; and Robert Holstein, a prominent California attorney. The Center prepares students for lives and careers in ethical public service, and it supports a wide range of community service-learning and intern opportunities at the local, state, and national level through its Office of Service-Learning and Community Action (OSLCA). During the regular sessions of the 2008–2009 academic year, 2,155 USF undergraduate students enrolled in service-learning courses. OSLCA assists faculty in integrating service with academic courses to enhance students’ learning, and hosts workshops, seminars, and individual consultations with community partners.
- Beginning in 2001, the department of environmental science partnered with local community-based organizations to coordinate water sampling as part of a broader long-term effort to achieve environmental justice in an area of San Francisco with the highest percentage of families below the poverty line and the highest concentration of African-Americans. The main objective of this project, known as the Yosemite Watershed Restoration Project, was to provide training and technical assistance for a community-led effort to gather baseline data, assess water quality, and begin to evaluate the impact on the community of lingering contamination from the Hunters Point Naval Shipyard, current industrial activities, illegal dumping, and sewer overflows. John Lendvay, one of the USF faculty leaders of the project, received a $771,000 state grant to support the project.
- Paul Zeitz, professor of mathematics, received the Northern California Award for Distinguished University Teaching of Mathematics from the Mathematics Association of America (MAA) in March 2002. The MAA is the largest national organization of college and university math professors. In January 2003, he was honored with the MAA’s national teaching award, the Deborah and Franklin Tepper Haimo Award. He was instrumental in coaching the 1994 U.S. team in the International Math Olympiad. It was the first time that all 6 team members received perfect scores.

- Catherine Brady, assistant professor in the Master of Fine Arts in Writing Program, was the 2002 co-winner of the Flannery O'Connor Award for short fiction.
- The Martín-Baró Scholars Program, founded by Gerardo Marín, currently a USF vice provost and professor of psychology, exemplifies the university's and the college's focus on social justice and service to others. In the fall of 2002, 33 freshmen from diverse ethnic backgrounds entered the university as Martín-Baró Scholars. In addition to living in the same residence hall during their freshman year, the students participated in an integrated course specially designed to explore issues of social justice and diversity through reflective service learning. The students also received academic and social support and advising from peer and faculty mentors and engaged in a variety of social justice activities.
- In 2002, Thomas Lucas, S.J. professor of art + architecture, and Wo Ye, a Beijing-born artist, began a five year project to replace stained glass windows in St. Ignatius Cathedral of Shanghai. The new windows incorporate Chinese characters and iconography, and they are expected to be finished in time for the 2010 World's Fair in Shanghai. Fr. Lucas' work on the project has received international coverage from such media outlets as the LA Times and the London Financial Times.
- In 2003, Jennifer Turpin became the first female dean in the history of the College of Arts and Sciences. She began at USF in 1991 as an assistant professor of sociology, published extensively, helped found the women's studies program at USF, chaired the sociology department, and was promoted to full professor while serving as associate dean in the college.
- Sam Green, adjunct professor in media studies, was nominated in 2004 for an academy award for his 2003 feature length documentary The Weather Underground. He was also awarded a $50,000 Access to Artistic Excellence grant from the National Endowment for the Arts in 2007. His film "Utopia, Part 3: The World's Largest Shopping Mall," was chosen to screen at the prestigious Sundance Film Festival in 2009.
- In 2003, physics professor Brandon Brown was the first scientist to take a number of techniques from physics and apply them to the gel collected from the shark's specialized sensory organs. Teaming with department colleague Marcelo Camperi, he also computationally visualized what the world must "look like" to sharks using an electric sense. Brandon was recognized in 2008 for his extensive research on sharks in several top scholarly journals such as Nature and Physical Review E, and has been featured in The New York Times, National Public Radio, and Scientific American. His essay, "Rebuild the House of Science", also won the grand prize in Seed Magazine's science writing contest.
- Community Connections, organized by the USF computer science department in 2003, is designed to bridge the digital divide, both locally and internationally, by providing technical and systems support for nonprofit organizations and schools in disadvantaged areas of San Francisco, and by constructing computer labs in schools in the developing world. In 2007-08, 40 students, faculty/staff, and alumni participated in its programs, including partnering with St. Anthony Foundation to construct a Tenderloin Technology Center (including 45 computers donated by USF), partnering with San Francisco's Department of Technology and Information Services to construct an online database of Bay Area technology centers, and conducting the fifth immersion trip to Tacna, Peru, helping students and teachers at three Jesuit schools develop computer expertise. In the spring of 2006, Chris Brooks, a faculty member who helps direct the program, was nominated for the national Ehrlich Award by Campus Compact in recognition of outstanding faculty contributions to community engagement, and he was named a Campus Compact-Carnegie Foundation Faculty Fellow.
- More than 350 students, community volunteers, and faculty members from the computer science department organized the first "flash mob supercomputer" event in history in April 2004. The supercomputer created in USF's Koret and Recreation Center linked approximately 670 computers to two portable generators and performed 180 billion mathematical operations per second. The event was reported by more than 200 media outlets worldwide, including the New York Times, which described the event in a front-page story.
- In 2004, the college received a $1 million gift from Joan and Ralph Lane to endow a center for Catholic social thought at USF. In addition to the Lane's gift, the family of Chancellor John Lo Schiavo, S.J. agreed that a fully endowed chair, the Joseph and Anna Lo Schiavo Chair, be located within the Lane Center for Catholic Studies and Social Thought. With these two gifts, the Center has focused on insights of Catholic social thought on contemporary problems to benefit the university community and society at large.
- Kevin Chun, associate professor of psychology, received the Early Career Award from the Asian American Psychology Association in 2005, a national organization representing Asian American psychologists and mental health professionals.

- Gerardo Marín, vice provost and professor of psychology, received an honorary doctorate from Péter Pázmány Katolikus Egyetem Catholic University in Budapest, Hungary, in 2005, for his contributions to the development of social policies and to international education.
- Juliet Spencer, assistant professor of biology, won a National Institutes of Health grant in 2005 for $100,000 to study how a common strain of the herpes virus manages to stay dormant in the human body for years. Human Cytomegalovirus (CMV) is a version of herpes that infects approximately 95% of the population during childhood. The Northern California Chapter of the Association for Women in Science also presented Spencer with the Ellen Weaver Award for 2009, which honors a woman early in her career whose work demonstrates exceptional service to women in science. Juliet is the faculty mentor to the USF Women in Science group and has helped students and many others become valuable members of the scientific community.
- John Stillwell, professor of mathematics, was named the winner of the 2005 Chauvenet Prize, a national award given by the Mathematical Association of America (MAA) in 2005 for his article “The Story of the 120-Cell,” published in Notices of the American Mathematical Society. His article illustrates the ways a many-sided polyhedron, the icosahedron, can be captured in two-, three-, and four-dimensional space. Professor Stillwell is a prolific author, whose many books include Mathematics and its History; The Four Pillars of Geometry; Elements of Number Theory; and Yearning for the Impossible: The Surprising Truths of Mathematics.
- Stephen Zavestoski, associate professor of environmental studies, received a 2005-2006 Fulbright Research Grant to South Asia, living and conducting research primarily in the tropical state of Kerala in the south of India.
- Michael Chorost, adjunct professor in rhetoric and composition, wrote Rebuilt, which was honored with the 2006 PEN/USA Book Award for Creative Nonfiction.
- Stephen Schloesser, S.J., Lo Schiavo Chair, Lane Center for Catholic Social Thought, received the American Catholic Historical Association’s John Gilmary Shea Prize in 2006 for his book Jazz Age Catholicism: Mystic Modernism in Postwar Paris, 1919-1939.
- Tracy Seeley, associate professor of English, won the Sheila K. Smith Short Story Prize in 2006 as part of the National League of American Pen Women’s Soul-Making Literary Competition.
- In 2006, USF’s long-standing commitment to social justice in the local and global community was recognized by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which designated USF as one of just 76 community engaged colleges and universities in the nation. In awarding the classification, the Carnegie Foundation said that USF’s community engagement programs were “exemplary” and that the university demonstrated an “excellent alignment between mission, culture, leadership, resources, and practices that support dynamic and noteworthy community engagement.” Seven of the major programs cited in the proposal to secure this prestigious classification were from the College of Arts and Sciences.
- D. A. Powell, associate professor of English, was announced as a finalist for one of the country’s most prestigious literary awards, the National Book Critics Circle Award for 2006, for his book, Chronic. Publishers Weekly gave his book a starred review, and they also mentioned Professor Powell in their review of the American Hybrid: A Norton Anthology of New Poetry. One of his poems was also chosen for inclusion in The Best American Poetry 2008, published by Scribner. Chronic also received the Northern California Independent Booksellers Association’s 2010 Book of the Year Award for poetry.
- In 2006, Kimberly Richman, associate professor of sociology, received $110,000 from the NSF for her project, “The Giving and Withdrawal of New Rights: A Natural Experiment in Legal Consciousness.”
- From 2004 to 2006, 8.5 percent of USF’s baccalaureate-receiving science students went on to earn research doctorates, while the national average during this period was 4 percent.
- Vanya Rainova, an MFA graduate student, had her short story, “Trampoline,” published in Best New American Voices (Fresh Fiction from the Top Writing Programs 2006).
- Travis Sharp, an undergraduate history major, was given honorable mention for his paper read at the Northern California Phi Alpha Theta Conference. Travis was also named the winner of a highly competitive 2006 Scoville Peace Fellowship, which placed him in Washington doing research on arms control and nuclear weapons issues during the 2007-2008 academic years.
- Jack Lendvay, associate professor of environmental science, received a 2006-2007 Fulbright Research Grant to travel to Brazil to pursue his project titled “Watersheds and Water Quality: Assessment and Management.”
- Jacqueline Taylor, associate professor of philosophy, received a highly competitive National Endowment for the Humanities fellowship for 2006-2007 to complete a book on John Hume.

- An ice-covered lake in Antarctica bears the name of professor of biology Deneb Karentz. This honor was bestowed upon her in 2007, and Lake Karentz recognizes her 20-year contribution to the study of the continent. Most of her research involves students from many of the nation's universities, has focused on the effects of ozone depletion on marine plankton, and has shown that many organisms have a good set of natural defenses against the increased ultraviolet exposure. From 1994 to 2009, Dr. Karentz has also taught integrated biology courses in Antarctica sponsored by the National Science Foundation.
- Christopher Brooks, associate professor of computer science, and Corey Cook, assistant professor of politics, were selected as 2007 Faculty Fellows for the California Campus Compact-Carnegie Foundation Faculty Fellows: Service-Learning for Political Engagement Program, funded in part by the Corporation for National and Community Service, Learn and Serve America. Only 25 faculty members from public and private universities across the state have been chosen for this honor.
- In 2007, David Wolber, professor of computer science, received $100,000 from the Wallace Alexander Gerbode Foundation for his "Transparency in Government Project."
- In 2007, Bruce Wydick, professor of economics, won 1st prize in a worldwide contest sponsored by USAID-best anti-poverty program impact evaluation.
- Robert Bachmann, Politics graduate of 2007, was one of 35 Field Organizers (out of thousands) for the Obama Campaign selected to serve on the Presidential Transition Team. He is working with the "Transportation Agency Review Group."
- Jennifer Liang, an undergraduate psychology major, won a research award that supports her working with Ricardo Munoz at San Francisco General in his smoking research program. Jennifer and another student in Dr. Munoz's lab were awarded the $30,000 prize based on essays each of them wrote. The award was announced at the Tobacco Related Disease Research Program, held in Sacramento in October 2007.
- Rachel Crawford, professor of English, whose book, Poetry, Enclosure, and the Vernacular Landscape 1700-1830, Cambridge University Press 2002, received the 2005 Alpha Sigma Nu Jesuit Book Award in the Humanities Category, was also selected as one of the winners of the 2007-08 Innovative Course Design Prize, awarded by the American Society for Eighteenth Century Studies, for her course "Teaching Eighteenth-Century British Literature and Cartography."
- Barbara Bundy, director of the Center for the Pacific Rim, was awarded the Asia Society of Northern California's leadership and excellence award for education in 2007. The Asia Society seeks to strengthen relations and promote understanding among the people, leaders, and institutions of Asia and the United States.
- James Lance Taylor, associate professor of politics, was elected president of the National Council of Black Studies and was presented with the organization's "Outstanding Service and Dedication" Award in 2007.
- Christina Tzagarakis-Foster, assistant professor of biology, won a $213,235 National Institutes of Health grant in 2007 to support her research into breast cancer genetics.
- Nikki Raeburn, associate professor of sociology, won the 2007 Max Weber Award for Distinguished Scholarship for her book, Changing the Corporation from the Inside Out: Lesbian and Gay Workplace Rights, awarded by the Organizations, Occupations, and Work Section of the American Sociological Association.
- Bryan Whaley, professor of communication studies, won the 2007 National Communications Association Health Communication Distinguished Book Award for his edited volume, Explaining Illness: Research, Theory, and Strategies.
- Elizabeth Greenwood's (2006 Dean's Medal winner and History major) lengthy book review essay will be published in the APA Newsletter on Hispanic/Latino Issues in Philosophy, a peer-reviewed and highly regarded publishing venue, in Fall 2006. As a consequence, Ms. Greenwood has been invited onto a panel at the 2007 Meeting of the Pacific Division of the American Philosophical Association. Elizabeth Greenwood was also the recipient of a New York Teaching Fellowship, a highly competitive position that will pay for a year of teaching for students of special needs in New York City.
- Sarah Burgess, assistant professor of communication studies, won the 2008 Law and Humanities Junior Scholar Paper Competition, a program sponsored by Georgetown Law School, Columbia Law School, UCLA Law School, and the USC Center for Law and the Humanities. The competition names the top seven junior scholars working in the field of law and the humanities in the nation.
- Chris Thompson, associate professor of exercise and sport science, received the 2008 Council on Aging and Adult Development's (CAAD) Outstanding Young Researcher Award. This award recognizes an outstanding researcher who has been working for less than ten years in the area of recreation and physical activity for older adults.

- John Callaway, professor of environmental science, has established himself as an international authority on wetlands restoration, a critical environmental topic. Callaway regularly wins support from State and Federal granting agencies to pursue his detailed measurements of wetlands ecosystems, all along the California Coast, as well as the Gulf Coast. In 2008, Callaway won a significant grant from the Gordon and Betty Moore Foundation, in recognition of his high-impact research.
- From 2000 to 2008, 64.8 percent of USF students, drawn largely from the sciences, who went through the USF Pre-Professional Health Committee, were successful in gaining admittance to medical school, whereas nationally the acceptance rate during this period was only 45.2 percent. Among USF students who receive a Bachelor of Science Degree, 8.5 percent go on to earn PhD's, according to the National Science Foundation, while the national average is 4 percent. Among USF's living alumni, there are more than 380 physicians, 580 engineers, 1,100 health care providers, and 160 dentists.
- Joshua Gamson, professor of sociology, won a national Guggenheim Fellowship in 2009, created to support scholastic research and artistic creation. Gamson was also honored with the 2006 American Library Association's Stonewall Book-Israel Fishman Nonfiction Award for his book, The Fabulous Sylvester: The Legend, the Music, the 70s in San Francisco.
- Claire Crowley, an international studies major with emphases in African studies and global studies, and Cecily Cook, an international studies major with emphases in peace and conflict and the Middle East, were recently named recipients of Benjamin A. Gilman International Scholarship awards. Crowley won $5,000 to study in Bamako, Mali, during the fall of 2008, while Cook won $8,000 to put toward a fall semester in Cairo, Egypt.
- The National Television Academy Northern California Chapter named media studies student Alexandra Platt the 2008 Peter J. Marino Production Scholarship award winner for her video production work. The educational arm of the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, responsible for the Emmys, presented the scholarship in May 2008 at the Palace of Fine Arts Theatre in San Francisco. She also had her documentary film premier at an international human rights film festival in Italy in April 2009.
- Manuel Vargas, associate professor of philosophy, received a fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities for his project "Building Better Beings: Agency and the Circumstances of Responsibility." Manuel also received a fellowship at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard University for 2008-2009.
- The University of San Francisco earned placement on the 2008 Corporation for National and Community Service (CNCS) President's Honor Roll for Community Service, with distinction, in part due to the College of Arts and Sciences centers and programs, including the Leo T. McCarthy Center for Public Service and the Common Good and the Community Connections program. The award recognizes universities nationwide that support innovative and effective community service programs. USF has received recognition by CNCS every year since the honor roll was launched in 2006, and is only one of 19 schools to be recognized with distinction every year since the program's inception.
- David Batstone, professor of theology and religious studies, was nominated in 2009 for The Right Livelihood Award, widely known as the "Alternative Nobel Prize" and recognized as the world's premier award for personal courage and social transformation. He was also nominated for the Robert F. Kennedy 2009 Human Rights Award given to the best human rights defenders around the globe. In 2007, Professor Batstone published Not for Sale, The Return of the Global Slave Trade and How We Can Fight It, which documented current human trafficking and how to abolish the modern day slave trade. In February 2007, the College's Erasmus students (and Professor Batstone) were featured in a Christian Science Monitor article on modern slavery. They were also featured on Channel 7 (KGO/ABC), Channel 2 (Fox), and Channel 4 (KRON). In 2008, Professor Batstone, Erasmus students, and the Not For Sale Campaign were featured in a major 2008 film, Call + Response.
- A 2009 report by the National Science Foundation noted that among bachelor of science graduates from the natural sciences in USF's College of Arts and Sciences, 8.5 percent went on to earn doctorates from 2000 to 2008, more than twice the national average among comparable institutions.
- In 2009, William Karney, professor of environmental sciences, and Claire Castro, professor of chemistry, received a National Science Foundation award for $268,369 over three years for their project "Structure and Mechanisms in Annulenes and Polycyclic Aromatic Hydrocarbons." This award follows their 2006 grant from the American Chemical Society and a previous grant of over $200,000 from the National Science Foundation.
- Horacio Camblong, professor of physics, received a Fulbright fellowship for a three-month international exchange at the University of La Plata in Argentina to advance his research on black hole thermodynamics.
- Brian Komei Dempster, associate professor of communication studies, edited a book, From Our Side of the Fence, which received the Nisei Voices Award from the National Japanese American Historical Society (NJAHs). This volume is a collection of first-person memoirs by Japanese Americans who were interned during World War II. In conjunction with the book award, professor Dempster received a Certificate of Special Congressional Recognition, given "in recognition of outstanding and invaluable service to the community," and signed by Congress Member Tom Lantos.

- Mary Burns, adjunct professor, rhetoric and composition, was awarded a 2009 Fulbright Fellowship to conduct work in Tunis, North Africa.
- Josh Gamson, professor of sociology, was selected from among 3,000 applicants for one of the highly prestigious Guggenheim Fellowships for 2009-2010.
- John Stillwell, professor of mathematics, was the recipient of the 2009 AJCU's Alpha Sigma Nu Book Award. John's book, Yearning for the Impossible, won in the mathematics/computer science category.
- David Vann, assistant professor in MFA in writing, won the 2009 AWP creative nonfiction award for his book, Last day on Earth: A Profile of the NIU Shooter, Steve Kazmierczak, which will be published in 2011. His story collection, Legend of a Suicide, was a New York Times Notable Book, won the Grace Paley Prize, was a California Book Award winner, and was selected by the Sunday Times of London as one of the "cultural highlights of the autumn."
- As of the fall semester of 2009, the College of Arts and Sciences enrolled 3742 undergraduate and graduate students in almost 100 different majors, minors, centers, institutes, and programs in the arts and humanities, social sciences, and the sciences.
- Eric Fischer, a graduate student in the economics department, received the Boren Fellowship in April 2010, the first USF student to do so, and was awarded $30,000 by the U.S. Government to study Arabic and conduct economic research in Algiers.
- Lisa Pezzino earned a prestigious fellowship from the National Science Foundation and chose in 2009 to study at the University of San Francisco to study the effect of infrastructure projects on the flow of groundwater.
- USF sociology senior Nicole Torres was named a 2010 Truman scholar for her leadership and service and plans to use the scholarship to attend law school.
- Professors of Economics, Alessandra Cassar and Pauline Grosjean, were awarded a highly competitive grant from the US State Department for their project "Democracy, Violence, Trust and Economic Preferences: An Empirical Investigation in Tajikistan and Kyrgyzstan."
- Computer science professor Christopher Brooks received a shared grant of $1.8 million from the National Science Foundation for collaborative work from 2010 to 2012 on computer modeling of earthquakes.
- In February 2010, Doug Powell, associate professor in English, received the Kingsley Tufts Award, the single largest monetary prize, given by Claremont Graduate University to a mid-career poet. He was also chosen as the 220th Phi Beta Cappa Poet.
- Professor Dean Rader won the T.S. Elliot Prize for Poetry for his manuscript "Work & Days." This award is for the best unpublished book of poetry in English and includes a $2,000 reward and publication by the Truman State University Press.
- The Psychology Department's Psi Chi chapter at USF was awarded the Regional Chapter award for 2009-2010 for its outstanding Achievements.
- USF's Computer Science department was listed as one of "The Top 50 Undergraduate Game Design Programs" out of 500 programs in the U.S. and Canada in April 2010.
- Professor of Politics, Robert Elias, has had his new book, The Empire Strikes Out: Hold Baseball Sold U.S. Foreign Policy & Sold the American Way Abroad, reviewed by the Associated Press, the Washington Post, The Huffington Post, and others.
- Lisa Harper of the MFA in writing program won the 2009 River Teeth Literary Nonfiction Prize for her nonfiction book Inside/Out.
- Sergio de la Torre's work in the Art + Architecture program is being shown as part of an exhibition titled The Mole's Horizon at the Center for Fine art in Brussels.
- Kim Richman, an associate professor in sociology won the Pacific Sociological Scholarship Award for her book, Courting Change: Queer Parents, Judges and the Transformation of American Family Law.
- USF Sophomore in Exercise and Sports Science Competed in the women's alpine Skiing events in the Vancouver Winter Olympics in 2010.
- Two USF Professors were awarded investing in Artists grants in April 2010 from the Center for Cultural Innovation to strengthen the creative support system for California artists working in all disciplines.

- Jorge Aquino, assistant professor of theology & religious studies and Latin American studies. Participated in a radio talk show on Theology and society in San Salvador June 21st, 2010, during a faculty-staff immersion.
- Hwa Ji Shin, assistant professor of sociology, along with her co-author, Kiyoteru Tsutsui, received the 2010 ASA Section Global and Transnational Sociology's Best Scholarly Article Award for "Global Norms, Local Activism, and Social Movement Outcomes: Global Human Rights and Resident Koreans in Japan."
- Brian Komei Dempster and Ronald Sundstrom, both professors in Arts & Sciences, were the co-winners of the Distinguished Teaching Award for part-time faculty for 2009-2010.
- Bernard von Bothmer and Nate Hinerman, both professors in Arts & Sciences, were the co-winners of the Distinguished Teaching Award for full-time faculty for 2009-2010.
- Brandon Brown was awarded the 2009-2010 Distinguished Research Award for his research in the area of sensory biophysics.
- Aparna Venkatesan, assistant professor of physics, was awarded an extremely prestigious grant from the Cottrell Foundation for $37,500 in May of 2010.
- Sophia Kleinsasser, who graduated in May 2010 with a degree in international studies, was awarded a Fulbright English Teaching Assistantship in Bulgaria. She studied abroad for a semester in the Budapest Program.
- "The New Yorker" Book Club chooses USF Writer, David Vann, a celebrated writer and University of San Francisco Associate Professor of creative writing, for his book "Legend of a Suicide" in April 2010. Recognized in June 2010 with the Ignatian Service Award for service to students was Professor of economics Bruce Wydick, singled out for incorporating classroom learning with service while putting students to work researching the efficacy of child-sponsor programs in six developing countries.
- The Sarlo Prize, recognizing excellence in teaching that exemplifies the ethical principles that inform USF's vision, mission, and values, went to Elisabeth Jay Friedman, associate professor of politics, in June 2010. Friedman has gained a reputation among students and fellow faculty for her intellect, command of her subject as the chair of the Latin American studies program, and devotion to students, a colleague said in a nominating letter to the awards committee.
- Mary Jane Niles, professor of biology, was named Faculty Mentor of the Year in June 2010 for her support of students as the chair of USF's Pre-Professional Health Committee for more than 10 years and as the faculty adviser for the biology honors society, Beta Beta Beta.
- Three USF seniors were selected in the 2010 Major League Draft. Doug Murray was selected in the 19th round by the Chicago White Sox, catcher Ryan Lipkin was taken in the 24th round by the Oakland Athletics and shortstop Derek Poppert went in the 30th round to the Seattle Mariners.

He is the second USF Asian studies major to receive this highly competitive AFAP (Advanced Filipino Abroad Program) Award. Charles Daulo was the first, receiving the scholarship in 2009.
- The Phyllis C. Watts Foundation chose Roberto Gutierrez Varea's Collective, Secos & Mojados BORDER TRIP(tych)/TRIP(tico) de la frontera, as one of the recipients of their prestigious grant cycle for 2010. Following this grant, in July 2010, the Creative Work Fund gave one of its awards for the performing arts to the collective produced by USF's programs in performing arts and social justice and Latin American studies.
- In 2010 The Exercise and Sport Science (ESS) department in the College of Arts and Sciences was granted the Outstanding Community Partner Award by the On Lok 30th Street Center for its efforts to make the Always Active Health Promotion program a success in the community. The program has brought physical activity opportunities and health promotion initiatives to over 800 older adults living in San Francisco, and ESS's fall prevention research program has helped over 100 older adults reduce their risk for an injurious fall through its 12-week exercise program. The department received Certificates of Recognition from California state legislators Tom Amiano and Mark Leno.
- D.A. Powell, associate professor of English, College of Arts and Sciences, won a Guggenheim Fellowship to work on his book, Useless Landscape, or a Guide for Boys, a collection of poems drawing from the landscape of California.
- David Vann, associate professor, MFA in Writing, College of Arts and Sciences, won a Guggenheim Fellowship to work on his sixth novel, Dirt, drawing on Vann's family history in California's Central Valley.

- In one of the poorest areas of San Francisco, the Bayview-Hunters point neighborhood, faculty and students from the Architecture and Community Design Outreach Program (ARCD), in the College of Arts and Sciences, worked with the City of San Francisco and the community to design and construct the Bridgeview Teaching and Learning Garden, which won the City's 2011 NEN award for Best Green Community Project. The goal of the project was to educate community members in organic gardening skills, beautify the neighborhood, and build social cohesion.

USF School of Management: Firsts, Facts, Honors, and Achievements

1924-2000

- In 1924, St. Ignatius College (as the University of San Francisco was then called) began offering evening courses in accounting and business administration. By the fall semester of 1925, these and other courses formed the basis for the College of Commerce and Finance, the predecessor of today's School of Management.
- The first three women began as students in the evening division of the College of Commerce and Finance in 1927, 37 years before the university's regular undergraduate day program became coeducational.
- The College of Commerce and Finance awarded the bachelor of commercial science degree to its first 10 students in May 1928.
- After World War II, enrollment skyrocketed at USF, many students attended the institution under the G.I. Bill of Rights, and the College of Commerce and Finance was renamed the College of Business and Administration.
- In 1953, the College of Business Administration became one of a small number of schools to be nationally accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB).
- The college's first MBA program was introduced during the 1964–65 academic year.
- USF received a major grant in 1973 from the Irvine Foundation to remodel the west end of Phelan Hall on the USF campus. The grant was given to honor Norman Loyall McLaren, a long-term trustee of the Irvine Foundation and a regent of USF.
- In 1974, the McLaren Center was dedicated, and the College of Business Administration moved into the new center. Norman McLaren died in December 1977, and the USF Board of Trustees changed the name of the College of Business Administration to the McLaren College of Business at its 1978 winter meeting.
- In 1975, the Office of Continuing Education (the predecessor of the College of Professional Studies) began at USF. It was designed to offer an innovative selection of undergraduate degrees in the evenings and on weekends, mostly to working adults who had undertaken some college work but had not completed a degree.
- From 1975 to 1979, the Office of Continuing Education developed undergraduate degrees in applied economics, human relations and organizational behavior, public administration, and public service. The degree programs were premised on a cohort model: a group of learners began and ended an entire degree program as a community of learners. The cohort model, an experiential learning component, and the delivery of the programs in the evenings and on the weekends placed USF on the cutting edge of adult education in the United States.
- The Office of Continuing Education was upgraded to the School of Continuing Education in 1979.
- The Board of Trustees approved renaming the School of Continuing Education the College of Professional Studies in 1980.
- In addition to its undergraduate accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), separate accreditation was granted to the graduate program in the McLaren College of Business in 1981 by the same organization. Today, USF is one of only 481 schools of business in the nation that is accredited at both graduate and undergraduate levels by AACSB International, the new designation for AACSB. There are approximately 2,400 U.S. institutions of higher education that have business schools or programs.
- In 1983, Michael O'Neill, former dean of the USF School of Education, developed a master's degree in nonprofit administration in the College of Professional Studies, one of the nation's first master's degrees in the nonprofit field.

2001-2012

- The International Institute of Criminal Justice Leadership was founded in the College of Professional Studies in 2001. It is currently under the direction of Anthony Ribera, former police chief of San Francisco. The institute provides training and research in law enforcement leadership for international, national, and local law enforcement personnel; and it sponsors an annual symposium that raises thousands of dollars each year for student scholarships.

- A group of 37 China Resources managers completed an executive MBA in Hong Kong through the McLaren School of Management in May 2003, and traveled to USF for commencement exercises. The students in this program were executives from mainland China, and when they came to USF to participate in commencement activities in St. Ignatius Church, it was, for most of the new graduates, the first time in their lives they had entered a church.
- In 2003, associate professor of business Mark Cannice inaugurated the USF International Business Plan Competition. The competition involves top-tier schools from all over the world submitting proposals for innovative business plans and sending teams of students to the Bay Area to compete for awards based on several criteria: defining a problem, providing a product or service to address the problem, projecting revenue and profits based on the market, and determining the amount of money needed from investors.
- In 2003, a major donation by Putra Masagung, a 1974 graduate of the business school, underpinned a capital campaign involving more than 3,000 donors to build a new wing for the business school, a state-of-the-art facility that opened in 2004. In recognition of Mr. Masagung's lead gift, the graduate programs are now offered within the Masagung Graduate School of Management.
- In recognition of a major closing gift by Thomas E. Malloy, class of 1961, and his wife Sharon, the new business school facility was named Malloy Hall in 2004.
- In 2005, accounting professor Todd Sayre created a course on sustainable business, the first of its kind in the USF School of Management and among the first offered at an American university.
- In 2006, USF's School of Management was ranked as one of the nation's top graduate schools for entrepreneurs, according to The Princeton Review and Entrepreneur magazine's annual ranking. The joint study surveyed more than 700 schools and ranked USF's Entrepreneurship Program 25th in the country.
- The USF MBA program is ranked 6th by The Princeton Review in 2006 for business schools with the greatest opportunities for minority students.
- In 2006, USF joined with the University of California, San Francisco (UCSF) to offer UCSF dental students a master's in business administration while they complete their doctorate in dental surgery. It was one of only 10 such programs nationwide and the first cooperative agreement between USF and UCSF.
- MBA graduate Robert Lahaderne claimed second place in the semi-final round of the USF International Business Plan Competition in the spring of 2008, with a proposal to improve hemodialysis for hundreds of thousands of patients. The 22 competing teams hailed from such top-tiered schools as Duke University, Massachusetts Institute for Technology (MIT), Cambridge University, and Hong Kong University of Science and Technology.
- In 2008, a team of students from the School of Management Honors Cohort Program was named division champions and undergraduate runners-up at the National Intercollegiate Business Ethics Competition.
- An undergraduate business ethics team won the undergraduate division championship in the 10th annual National Intercollegiate Business Ethics Competition held at Loyola Marymount University in April 2008, competing against schools such as Dartmouth College, New York University, Loyola University of Chicago, the U.S. Military Academy, the U.S. Naval Academy, and the University of Oregon.
- In January 2009, the Business School went global, introducing an ambitious joint program on three continents designed to immerse students in the real-world issues of globalization, international entrepreneurship, and management. The 12-month joint Master of Global Entrepreneurship and Management (jMGEM) – comprised of classes at USF, in Barcelona, and in Taipei, Taiwan, is designed for students who recently earned an undergraduate business degree, or the equivalent.
- In 2009, the USF Chapter of Beta Alpha Psi, an honorary organization of financial information students and professionals, achieved superior chapter status, the highest recognition from that national organization. The USF business students logged in 1,122 professional development hours and 821 hours of community service for a total of 1,943 hours.
- At the National Foundation for Teaching Entrepreneurship (NFTE) 16th Annual Entrepreneurial Spirit Awards Dinner in New York in April 2009, Mike Duffy, Dean of the School of Management, received the 2009 Enterprising Educator Award in recognition of his "excellence in advancing entrepreneurship education throughout the Bay Area."
- In June 2009, the University of San Francisco created the School of Business and Professional Studies by merging the School of Business and Management with the College of Professional Studies. The merger was designed to build upon the strengths of both legacy schools, bringing into a single administrative structure faculty and staff with complimentary expertise. Mike Duffy, former Dean of the School of Business and Management, became the founding dean of the new school.

- As of the fall semester of 2009, the School of Management enrolled 2,619 undergraduate and graduate students in its wide range of on-campus, regional, and international programs.

USF School of Nursing and Health Professions: Firsts, Facts, Honors, and Achievements

1948–2000

- In 1948, the USF Department of Nursing was formed in partnership with St. Mary's Hospital. The first class had 20 students pursuing a Bachelor of Science of Nursing.
- An autonomous School of Nursing was established in 1954, and attained full accreditation by the National League for Nursing (NLN) and the California State Board of Nurse Examiners.
- USF graduated its first male nurse, John Meenaghan, in 1967.
- In 1969, Cowell Hall opened its doors as the new home for the School of Nursing. The building was named for Samuel Cowell, San Francisco businessman and philanthropist, whose foundation contributed $450,000 toward the construction costs. Other funding came from the U.S. Department of Health and the Crown Zellerbach Foundation.
- The Beta Gamma Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau International, the nursing honor society, was installed at USF in 1971.
- In 1984, the School of Nursing started its first graduate program, leading to a Master of Science in Nursing.
- During the early 1990s, the School of Nursing began to focus at the graduate level on preparing students for advanced practice nursing, as family nurse practitioners and clinical nurse specialists.

2001–2012

- In 2003, the School of Nursing was accredited for the first time by the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education (CCNE) for its baccalaureate and graduate programs. Prior to that, it had been accredited by the National League for Nursing.
- In 2009, the School of Nursing was re-approved by the California Board of Registered Nursing.
- Every year since 2001, USF nursing students and faculty have traveled to the village of San Lucas Toliman in Guatemala, under the direction of USF Associate Professor of Nursing Dr. Linda Walsh, to enhance the health care and lives of mothers, their infants, and the community. For five straight years (2006-2011), the program has been cited by the Corporation for National and Community Service for the Presidents Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll with Distinction, reflective of USF's commitment to global social justice.
- In 2004, the School of Nursing celebrated its 50th anniversary. The nursing program had grown from 20 students in its first class to over 800 students enrolled in 2004.
- A $1.3 million grant from the Gordon and Betty Moore Foundation assisted in the design and implementation of a 5-semester MSN program open to individuals with a bachelors degree or higher in a non-nursing area to be educated in the role of Clinical Nurse Leader. The first class of 30 students entered in the summer of 2005.
- The passage rate for USF nursing students on the California Board of Registered Nurses NCLEX-RN Exam in 2007 was 96.3%; one of the highest in California in 2007-2008. The national average was 86%.
- The 2007 U.S. News and World Report recognized the USF Graduate School of Nursing on their list of best nursing programs across the nation.
- The School of Nursing received approval in 2007 to offer the Doctorate of Nursing Practice (DNP) degree, making USF the first university in California to offer this advanced degree for working nurses.
- In 2008, the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education (CCNE) extended accreditation to the School of Nursing for the full term of 10 years.
- The School of Nursing received a $750,000 grant from the Helene Fuld Health Trust. This New York-based trust is the largest private funder of nursing students and nursing education in the country, with a highly selective and invitational only grant application process.
- In 2008-2009, the School of Nursing received over $175,000 in traineeships and HSRA grants for students to finance their nursing education programs.

- In 2008, School of Nursing Professor Emeritus Jane Vincent Corbett established an endowed nursing scholarship fund to help nursing students continue their education. Dr. Corbett has also influenced nursing care through her book, Laboratory Tests and Diagnostic Procedures with Nursing Diagnoses.
- The USF School of Nursing established a partnership in 2009 with the Bach Mai Nursing School in Hanoi, Vietnam. Known as the Vietnam Nurse Project, the partnership has three primary goals: to promote cultural sensitivity and awareness of the health care needs of Vietnamese patients, both in Vietnam and the Bay Area; to revise the curriculum at Bach Mai to reflect contemporary nursing care standards, particularly in the areas of maternal and neonatal health care; and to provide assistance in using instructional methods that promote student engagement and interaction.
- Innovative programs developed by USF in 2007-2008 have given SFGH and the VA –Palo Alto Hospital nurses the opportunity to take USF nursing classes at their hospital. The classes are taught by USF faculty, based on USF curriculum, and geared towards a Clinical Nurse Leader Master's Degree.
- The USF Regional campuses in San Ramon and Santa Rosa have expanded their programs to include Clinical Nurse Leader Master's Degree for practicing nurses in each of those geographical areas.
- In 2009, BSN graduate and professional funk style street dancer Marina Stankov-Hodge received a Fulbright arts grant to teach dance choreography in Brazil, potentially in conjunction with reproductive health education. Marina conducted research for a master's thesis on health policy at the Geneva School of Diplomacy and International Relations in Geneva, Switzerland. She is the third USF student to win a Fulbright, following Kelko Petrosky in 2004-2005 and Su-Lin Thronson in 2000-2001.
- School of Nursing associate professor Greg DeBourgh was named a National League for Nursing (NLN) Academy of Nursing Education Fellow (ANEF) in 2009, one of just 65 selected for this honor nationwide.
- In the spring of 2009, associate professor Judith Lambton was awarded a Fulbright Grant by the U.S. State Department to work as a Fulbright Specialist Scholar at the Haririr School of Nursing at the American University in Beirut, Lebanon, to help establish a MSN in Pediatric Nursing.
- In 2009, School of Nursing instructor Elizabeth Cooper, who graduated in December 2008 from USF with a Doctorate of Nursing Practice (DNP), became the School of Nursing's first faculty member to receive National League for Nursing (NLN) Certification as a Nursing Educator (CNE).
- The School of Nursing piloted the first program in California to employ clinical simulation for 50% of students' pediatric and 25% of students' obstetrics clinical hours with time in a simulation lab. The CABRN has extended this use through the Fall 2009 semester.
- The School of Nursing annually sends more than 800 students throughout the city for clinical experiences and volunteer work.
- In December 2008, six USF DNP students became the first nurses to graduate with a DNP in the State of California.
- The Doctorate of Nursing Practice (DNP) degree, approved in 2007, received its initial accreditation from the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education in September 2009, the first accredited DNP in California.
- The Californian Association of Colleges of Nursing elected Dean Judith Karshmer as its president in May 2010, and she will lead the industry advocacy group for the next two years.
- A University of San Francisco School of Nursing immersion trip to San Lucas Mission in Guatemala to provide prenatal care quickly became a disaster relief effort after Tropical Storm Agatha came ashore May 29, 2010, turning roads into rivers, causing landslides, and killing dozens. The day Agatha made land in Guatemala, Linda Walsh, associate professor of nursing and a midwife, with the assistance of four of the nine student nurses on the trip, provided emergency care and attended two deliveries. The USF nursing group received the San Francisco County Act of Courage Hero Organization Award.
- USF's School of Nursing changed its name to the School of Nursing and Health Professions. The name change reflected the school's expansion to include a master of public health (MPH) degree beginning in the fall of 2011. The initial MPH cohort had 22 students pursuing graduate work in community health, global health, and health promotion education.
- Associate Professor of Nursing and Health Professions, Susan Prion, received a Fulbright Scholarship to travel to Vietnam for the 2011-2012 Academic year.
- Associate Professor of Nursing and Health Professions, Margaret Hansen, received a Fulbright award for the spring semester of 2012 to conduct research in Iceland.
- The Western Association of Schools and Colleges (WASC) accredited a new PsyD in Clinical Psychology with an Emphasis in Behavioral Health (May 31, 2012), jointly sponsored by the School of Nursing and Health

- Professions, and an online Master of Science in Nursing (September 2, 2011).
- Since its founding, the School of Nursing and Health Professions has graduated more than 6,500 students. Among its living alumni, USF counts 2,070 registered nurses.
 - As of the fall semester of 2012, the School of Nursing and Health Professions enrolled 717 undergraduate students in its Bachelor of Science in Nursing (BSN) program, and 476 graduate students in its Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) and its Doctor of Nursing Practice (DNP) programs.

School of Nursing and Health Professions: Prominent Alumni

- Sheila Burke – ('73) was the executive dean and lecturer in public policy at Harvard University's John. F. Kennedy School of Government, and is the former Undersecretary of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C.
- Kerry Paige Nestle, - ('78) was named as the Chief Nurse Officer for the United States Public Health Service by the Surgeon General. The Change of Command Ceremony took place on November 2, 2009 in Washington, DC.
- Janice Hudson (McCollough) - ('82), published a book about her career in nursing. It was a journal of her ten years as a helicopter flight nurse in the San Francisco Bay Area. It is titled "Trauma Junkie: Memoirs of an Emergency Flight Nurse", published by Firefly books. It has been well received and recently won a California Readers Award.

USF School of Education: Firsts, Facts, Honors, and Achievements

1947–1996

- In the spring of 1947, USF initiated a Department of Education, chaired by Paul Harney, S.J., and in January 1948, the California State Department of Education approved USF's granting of secondary school teaching credentials in foreign languages (French, Latin, and Spanish), English, life science, general science, physical science, and social studies.
- During the May 1949 commencement exercises, the first class to be granted secondary teaching credentials at USF, walked across the graduation stage.
- By the fall of 1949, the Department of Education developed a program leading to a master's in education; in 1951, the department added the secondary school administration and supervision credentials to its repertoire of credentials; and in 1964, a counseling and guidance credential was added.
- The USF Board of Trustees voted to upgrade the Department of Education to the School of Education at its 1972 meeting.
- In 1975, the first students commenced work on the doctor of education degree, which included concentrations in curriculum and instruction, educational psychology/counseling, organization and leadership, private education leadership, and multicultural education.
- Upward Bound started at USF in 1976 and is now in the School of Education. It is one of the oldest and most respected of USF's many community engagement projects. Under the direction of Janice Dirden-Cook, it prepares disadvantaged high school students for successful entry into, retention in, and completion of postsecondary education. Over the past decade, 80 percent of the program's participants have graduated from high school, 90 percent of the graduates have gone on to college, and 80 percent of those who started college completed their degree or were still attending college after 5 years. During the 2007–08 academic year and summer, students from 12 San Francisco public high schools, 4 charter high schools, and 3 Catholic high schools participated in the project.
- The Institute for Catholic Educational Leadership (ICEL), launched in 1976 by professor of education Michael O'Neill, was the first stand-alone university program in the country teaching lay Catholic educators. It offers a doctorate and a master's degree in Catholic school leadership, community service symposia and conferences, workshops for diocesan teachers and administrators, and various research initiatives. During the 2008-09 academic year, under the direction of Brother Raymond Vercruysee, 36 students worked on graduate degrees in Catholic Education leadership through ICEL.
- The Center for Instruction and Technology (CIT) was started in the School of Education in the fall of 1983 as a model classroom environment for students in teacher education. It is now part of USF's Information Technology Services, and under the direction of John Bansavich, it provides services to all of the university's programs and students.
- In 1985, Emily Girault and Brian Gerrard, associate professors of education, developed the Catholic Schools and Family Counseling Program, now known as the Center for Child and Family Development. It provided counseling services for elementary school children and their families in the Mission District of the Archdiocese of San Francisco and trained master's and doctoral candidates. The school-based family counseling program now operates in 30 Catholic and public schools in San Francisco and other counties. It is the largest and longest-running school-based family-counseling program of its type in the United States. Professor Gerrard won the Jefferson Award for Public Service from CBS for his efforts in developing the Center for Child and Family Development.
- The School of Education Building, formerly Presentation High School, was acquired by USF in 1991 from the Sisters of the Presentation. It houses the School of Education faculty and administrative offices, classrooms, Center for Instruction and Technology (CIT), and a theater that seats 500 people.
- In 1993, USF's School of Education became the first school in the state to offer an alternative learning specialist (LH) credential approved by the California Commission on Teacher Credentialing. The program enabled students to earn the LH credential in one year while teaching in a special education classroom with full pay. This innovative program represented a collaborative effort between USF and Bay Area school districts.

- USF's Special Education Program, in the Department of Learning and Instruction, has been notably successful in securing federal grants, having received more than $5 million in federal grant awards since 1997, through the efforts of Education Professor Susan Evans and her colleagues. In 2005, the program was awarded $800,000 by the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Special Education Programs (OSEP). This four-year grant supported learning and instruction doctoral students preparing for careers in higher education as special education teachers and researchers. USF is the first university in California to be funded by this highly competition program in over a decade. Ninety schools competed from across the country and only 24 were funded. Over 230 credential, masters, and doctoral students in learning and instruction/special education have received funding from federal grants and are working as K-12 special education teachers and as university faculty across the state and nation.
- In 1997, through the efforts of staff in the School of Education and the Office of Academic and Enrollment Services, USF was one of the first institutions of higher education in the nation to participate in the America Reads program, which brings students into the community to assist disadvantaged elementary school children with learning how to read. This engagement with young children, families, and teachers gives university students an opportunity to observe how education makes a difference in young learners' lives, trains students to teach reading, and provides education experience for students who seek a career in teaching. In this federally funded program, USF collaborated with San Francisco Unified School District elementary schools, selected Catholic elementary schools, and nonprofit children's centers. The America Reads Program has provided training and educational experience to approximately 650 USF students, many of who have gone on to careers in teaching.
- Established by the School of Education, the Multicultural Alliance, and K-12 Schools in the San Francisco Bay Area in 1998, Teacher Education for the Advancement of a Multicultural Society (TEAMS) addresses the critical shortage of teachers of color in Bay Area urban schools, engages and enhances the community through service-learning and community service projects, and seeks to improve the academic achievement of underrepresented minority students. With USF as its host, TEAMS partners with 50 K-12 schools in the San Francisco Bay Area and 5 other universities, and school districts across California and Washington State. During the 2007-08 academic year, under the direction of Mary Rose Fernandez, 50 USF education students from diverse ethnic backgrounds enrolled as TEAMS AmeriCorps Fellows and received education awards to complete their teaching credential program and gain hands-on experience providing service teaching in urban public schools. For 2007-08, the TEAMS Project obtained a grant for $617,518 from the Corporation for National and Community Service, through its AmeriCorps Professional Corps Program.
- The National Association for Multicultural Education selected Dr. Lois Moore, graduate of the School of Education and adjunct professor in the School's International and Multicultural Education Department, as its 2005 recipient of the Carl A. Grant Multicultural Research Award.
- Mary Peter Travis, O.P., associate professor, emeritus, School of Education, received a lifetime achievement award in 2005 from the National Catholic Educational Association for her research and promotion of Catholic education. She was also honored at Georgetown University by the Center of Applied Research for the Apostolate with the Richard Cardinal Cushing Award for the Advancement of Church Research.
- Terence Patterson, professor of counseling psychology in the School of Education, won the 2006 Florence Kaslow Award from the Division of Family Psychology, American Psychological Association, for Distinguished Contributions to International Family Psychology.
- Christine Yeh, associate professor of counseling psychology, won the 2006 Patrick Okura Community Leadership Award, presented by the Asian American Psychological Association for Outstanding Leadership in Community Service. She also won the 2006 Pine Briggs Award for Outstanding Contributions to Research.
- Jessica Keith, a master's candidate in the International and Multicultural Education Department, received a prestigious career development grant for $7,000 from the American Association for University Women (AAUW) during the Spring 2006 semester.
- The Upward Bound Program, America Reads, and the TEAMS Program in the School of Education were cited in the National and Community Service President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll with Distinction for the fourth consecutive year in 2010. These three programs were also recognized in 2006 by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which designated USF as one of just 76 community engaged colleges and universities in the nation. In awarding the classification, the Carnegie

Foundation said that USF's community engagement programs were "exemplary" and that the university demonstrated an "excellent alignment between mission, culture, leadership, resources, and practices that support dynamic and noteworthy community engagement."

- Beginning in January 2008, Project Learn Belize, in cooperation with University Ministry's Arrupe Immersion Program, sent dual degree seniors and School of Education graduate students to the Central American county of Belize, which lacks a stable public education system, to teach as volunteers in private schools, such as Sacred Heart Catholic Elementary School. The project marks the first attempt to provide students in the USF teacher education program with a education-focused experience outside the usual channels of American education, exposing students to the realities of the developing world.
- The School of Education became the first pedagogical college in the nation to offer an emphasis in human rights for masters and doctoral education students. Seventeen international and multicultural education students enrolled in the emphasis in the Spring 2009 semester.
- In 2009, President Obama nominated USF alum Martha Kanter, EdD '89, as U.S. Undersecretary of Education. Dr. Kanter will oversee the nation's postsecondary education policy, federal student aid, adult education, and vocational education.
- Susan Katz, professor of international and multicultural education, was named a Fulbright Scholar for Spring 2010, her second such award in six years. She will use the four-month long expenses paid research grant to study and live among the Shuar, an indigenous nation in the southern Amazon region of Ecuador.
- As of the fall semester of 2009, the School of Education enrolled 884 students and offered a wide range of doctoral, master's, and credential programs on the USF campus and at regional campuses in Cupertino, Santa Rosa, Sacramento, and San Ramon. Academic programs include the full-range of multiple-subject, single-subject, service, and specialist credentials; master's programs in counseling psychology (with emphasis in school counseling or marriage and family therapy), Catholic school leadership and teaching, digital media and learning, international and multicultural education (with optional emphasis in human rights education), learning and instruction, organization and leadership, teaching English as a second language, and teaching; and doctoral programs in Catholic school leadership, learning and instruction, international and multicultural education (with optional emphasis in human rights education or second language acquisition), and organization and leadership.
- The publication in September 2009 of The Psychology of Executive Coaching, Theory and Application, Second Edition, by Bruce Peltier, adjunct professor in the Department of Counseling Psychology accompanies his many accomplishments, as he has taught at the School of Education for many years and was recently honored by USF with a Distinguished Teaching Award.
- The Association of California School Administrators recognized Christopher Thomas, assistant professor of leadership studies, as Professor of Education of the Year for 2010. The award is one of 19 presented annually to recognize outstanding performance and achievements in the public education system.
- Mary Coen, associate director of the dual degree in teacher preparation program, won Staff Mentor of the Year for 2010 for her tireless efforts in advising more than 85 undergraduate students and as the fieldwork coordinator in charge of placing those students in San Francisco schools.
- The ITS Part-Time Faculty Innovations Award for incorporating new ways of using information technology in education went to Yvette Fagan, School of Education, in June 2010. Fagan's students used multiple software programs to create movies of students studying social sciences and developing Internet-based learning activities.
- In response to the increasing diversity of California's public schools, the University of San Francisco's School of Education created a new degree program that focuses on teaching in urban schools. Launched in 2009-2010, the Master of Arts in Teaching: Urban Education and Social Justice (UESJ) trains future educators to work in urban settings by focusing on the complex learning needs and strengths of urban students from diverse cultural, educational, and socioeconomic backgrounds.
- For the second year in a row, a USF School of Education graduate was named California Teacher of the Year. Kadhira Rajagopal, who earned a master's degree in teaching at USF in 2005, and who teaches math at Union High School near Sacramento, was honored as 2011 Teacher of the Year by California Superintendent of Public Instruction Jack O'Connell. Valerie Ziegler, who earned a master's degree in education from USF in 2004, won the award in 2010.
- On December 5, 2011 USF's School of Education and its partners in the San Francisco Teacher Residency Program received a $2.2 million U.S. Department of Education Grant to prepare San Francisco teachers for hard-to-staff schools and high-needs students, including in the areas of math, science, and bilingual education.

USF School of Law: Firsts, Facts, Honors, and Achievements

1912–1999

- The School of Law was established in 1912 as an evening program at St. Ignatius College (as the University of San Francisco was then called). The School of Law's founding dean, Matthew I. Sullivan, was an alumnus of St. Ignatius College, who later became chief justice of the California Supreme Court.
- On September 18, 1912, the first law class, composed of 39 young men, met on the fifth floor of the Grant Building, on the corner of Seventh and Market streets in downtown San Francisco.
- In 1917, the School of Law moved to the "shirt factory," on the corner of Hayes and Shrader streets, where St. Ignatius College had temporarily relocated after the devastating 1906 San Francisco earthquake and fire.
- The California Supreme Court selected the first Board of Bar Examiners to administer a statewide bar exam to potential attorneys in 1919. Among the 24 graduates of the St. Ignatius College School of Law who took the exam in 1922, 23 passed.
- Throughout the 1920s, enrollment in the School of Law saw continued growth, from 109 students in 1920 to 266 in 1929. The majority of the students who attended the law school during the 1920s went on to successful law careers in San Francisco. Fifteen of those who graduated from 1920 to 1929 were elevated to the bench in San Francisco or elsewhere in California.
- The first women were admitted to the law school in 1927, 37 years before the university's regular undergraduate day program became coeducational.
- In 1927, along with the college division, the School of Law moved to Campion Hall (now Kalmanovitz Hall), the first academic building on the current campus of the University of San Francisco.
- Raymond Sullivan and Preston Devine, two award-winning debaters at St. Ignatius College in the early 1920s, later graduated from the college's School of Law. Raymond Sullivan eventually became an associate justice of the California Supreme Court, and Preston Devine later became the presiding judge of the California Court of Appeal.
- The School of Law was exclusively an evening division until 1931, when a day division was initiated.
- In 1935, the School of Law was accredited by the American Bar Association, and in 1937, it was accredited by the Association of American Law Schools.
- During the years immediately following World War II, almost 90 percent of USF's law students received educational benefits under the G.I. Bill of Rights. Enrollment in the school, which had dropped to 50 by the spring of 1945, more than doubled to 109 by the fall of 1945.
- From 1953 to 1958, the USF School of Law attained a three-year average bar passage rate of 82 percent, among the highest of California's law schools.
- In 1959, the School of Law moved to the third floor of the newly constructed Gleeson Library, a temporary site until construction of a new building for the law school.
- In 1960, Charles Kendrick gave the largest single donation in the history of the University of San Francisco up to that time: a $1 million gift in toward the construction of a new building for the School of Law, Kendrick Hall.
- Robert F. Kennedy, attorney general of the United States, delivered a speech via telephone and public address system during the 1962 dedication of Kendrick Hall. Kennedy said he was confident that "the graduates who come out of Kendrick Hall in the long years of its future will be lawyers courageously dedicated to the broadest horizons of citizenship and service. We will be waiting for them. We need them."
- The 1960s were punctuated by calls by many USF law students for an end to the Vietnam War, for greater diversity among faculty and students, for student representation on decision-making committees, for more need-based student financial aid, and for a curriculum that had greater relevance to contemporary social issues.
- From 1962 to 1969, the student population of the law remained at approximately 325, about evenly divided between day and evening students. Between 1970 and 1975, student enrollment more than doubled, to about 750 students. It has since fluctuated between 623 and 750 students, with approximately 80 percent now attending the full-time day division.
- The USF Street Law Project was begun under Tom Nazario in 1976. More than 100 students, faculty, and staff annually provide volunteer legal services to numerous community agencies, and each year, the Project reaches nearly 2,200 predominately inner-city high school and middle school students with “street law” courses, taught by USF law students under faculty supervision.

1999–2012

- In March 1999, a ceremonial groundbreaking took place for a major addition to the school: the Dorraine Zief Law Library. Arthur Zief, a 1947 graduate of the law school, named the new library after his wife Dorraine. His $3.2 million gift also underpinned a new student lounge, named for Zief’s son, Arthur, and an entry plaza named after Arthur Zief himself.
- Established in 1999 by Professor and Dean Jeffrey Brand, and other faculty members, the Center for Law and Global Justice has engaged in human rights internships in El Salvador, Brazil, and at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva; developed judicial training programs in Vietnam; engaged in anti-corruption work in the Philippines and in Equatorial Africa; worked on issues related to Haitian refugees in the Dominican Republic; and promoted legal education, human rights, economic development and rule-of-law projects in Cambodia, Indonesia, and East Timor. The Center has developed two justice centers for legal aid in Cape Town, South Africa; trained judges in Vietnam; and produced 31 volumes of legal texts for Cambodia.
- The J. Thomas McCarthy Institute for Intellectual Property and Technology Law, begun in 2000, was named for Thomas McCarthy, whose career at USF was marked by such outstanding and cutting-edge publications that he became the most influential trademark attorney in the United States. Professor McCarthy was named to Law Dragon’s list of the Top 500 Lawyers in America in 2005. He was also named the 2005 “Global Trademarks Lawyer of the Year” in the inaugural issue of Who’s Who Legal Awards. McCarthy was the recipient of the 2003 President’s Award of the International Trademark Association; the 2000 Pattishall Medal for excellence in teaching trademark law from the Brand Names Education Foundation; the 1997 Ladas Professional Author Award from the Brand Names Education Foundation; and the Centennial Award in Trademark Law from the American Intellectual Property Law Association in 1997.
- In the spring of 2002, the Koret Foundation, one of the largest Jewish-sponsored charitable trusts in the United States, awarded $3.25 million to the School of Law. On January 29, 2004, the new Koret Law Center, consisting of the Zief Law Library and the reconstructed Kendrick Hall was dedicated; an event presided over by the Honorable Anthony Kennedy, associate justice of the United States Supreme Court.
- In October 2004, law students enrolled in the USF International Human Rights Clinic, under the supervision of USF Law Professor Connie de la Vega, attended meetings of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights in Geneva and the Commission of the Status of Women in New York, where they lobbied delegates, made oral statements, and wrote reports that become part of the official record. In 2005, USF students were the only students accredited to address the U.N. Commission on Human Rights in Geneva and the U.N. Commission on the Status of Women in New York.
- In March 2005, Professor Constance de la Vega’s work in international law gained national prominence when the Supreme Court used a friend-of-the-court brief she authored in their decision to ban the execution of criminals who committed their crimes before they were 18 years old. The brief was influential in the 5-4 decision in the case of Roeper v. Simmons, ending the death penalty for juvenile offenders in 19 states where executions were legal.
- Eight USF School of Law graduates (Max Gutierrez ’59, Michael H. Ahrens ’69, Thomas J. Brandi ’72, Eugene Crew ’62, Bette B. Epstein ’86, Kevin Lancaster ’86, John Lawrence McDonnell Jr. ’63, and Frank Pitre ’81) were all named in the top 100 in Law and Politics’ List of “Northern California Super Lawyers 2005,” published in the September 2005 issue of San Francisco magazine.
- The Center for Law and Global Justice, the Street Law Project, and the Law in Motion Service Program were all recognized in 2006 by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, which designated USF as one of just 76 community engaged colleges and universities in the nation. In awarding the classification, the Carnegie Foundation said that USF’s community engagement programs were “exemplary” and that the university demonstrated an “excellent alignment between mission, culture, leadership, resources, and practices that support dynamic and noteworthy community engagement.”
- In 2007, a team of three USF law school students (Christi Moore, Jennifer Roden, and Scott Troxell) took 1st place for Best Brief, out of 37 teams, at the 2007 National Appellate Advocacy Competition (NAAC). The NAAC is one of the most prestigious moot court competitions held in the U.S. Three other USF Law School students (Rachel Brilliant, Josh Drexler, and Eric Wiesner) earned 2nd place for Best Respondent's Brief at the Wagner Labor and Employment Law Competition in New York.

- USF Law Professor Susan Freiwald co-wrote an amicus brief with Professor Patricia Bellia of Notre Dame Law School, which the Sixth Court of Appeals relied on in its ruling in the case of Warshak v. U.S. The court held that e-mail should receive the same constitutional protection as a telephone call, and cited Freiwald and Bellia's brief in its decision.
- USF law students Phyra McCandless and Jeff Chorney received Silver Key Awards from the ABA Law Student Division at the 2007 Circuit Spring Conference. This is the highest award given by circuit governors to outstanding individuals who have contributed at the school, circuit, and national levels.
- Bay Area Lawyers for Individual Freedom (BALIF) honored USF's Pride Law Association with its Law Student Association of the Year Award in 2008. Founded in 1980, BALIF is the nation's oldest and largest regional bar association of lesbians, gay men, bisexuals, and transgender persons in the field of law.
- USF law student Juliana Poindexter earned second place in the 2008 Louis Jackson National Student Writing Competition in Employment and Labor Law.
- Cynthia Burks '08, Mary Johnson '08, and Eric Wiesner '08, accepted the 2008 ABA-BNA Award for Excellence in the Study of Labor and Employment Law. The award is sponsored by the American Bar Association's Section of Labor and Employment Law and The Bureau of National Affairs.
- The USF School of Law Class of 2008 posted a pass rate of 87.5 percent on the July 2008 California Bar examination, a mark that exceeded the statewide average of 83 percent for first-time takers from California American Bar Association accredited law schools. This was the sixth highest passage rate in the state.
- The USF School of Law's efforts to humanize legal education through such programs as guided meditation sessions and a course on interpersonal dynamics were highlighted in an October 2008 story in the National Law Journal.
- In the 2008 edition of the Princeton Review's Best 170 Law Schools, the USF School of Law was described as "a remarkably accommodating and comfortable place to study law....While course work is rigorous, students appreciate the small class sizes as well as the personal relationships they develop with the teaching and administrative staff."
- Adjunct Professor Carol Langford '86 received the 2007-2008 Howard Lichtenstein Distinguished Professorship of Legal Ethics Award, given by the Hofstra University School of Law.
- In November 2008, a USF School of Law Thomas Tang Moot Court Competition team advanced to the international finals in Seattle. Students Alan Law and Erin Park won the Pacific region finals with the best legal brief.
- The University of San Francisco earned placement on the 2009 Corporation for National and Community Service (CNCS) President's Honor Roll for Community Service, in part due to law school centers and programs, including the Street Law Project and the Center for Law and Global Justice. The award recognizes universities nationwide that support innovative and effective community service programs.
- The USF School of Law's Investor Justice Clinic received national attention for its work on behalf of small investors. A story titled "Amid Downturn, Law Students Give Aggrieved Investors a Day in Court," appeared in the April 3, 2009, issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education, and included interviews with student Cru Ulrich, Professor Robert Talbot, and Dean Jeffrey Brand. The Investor Justice Clinic also received national attention during the May 30, 2009, broadcast of NBC Nightly News, which included a segment on the clinic as part of the program's "Seeking Solutions" series.
- USF School of Law Associate Professor Richard Leo received the prestigious 2009 Herbert Jacob Book Prize from the Law and Society Association at the organization's annual meeting in May 2009. Leo's book, Police Interrogation and American Justice, was the co-winner of the prize, which recognizes the most outstanding scholarship in law and society published each year.
- The USF School of Law was listed as one of the top 100 law schools in the 2010 U.S. News & World Report rankings. The USF School of Law increased by 14 spots over its 2009 ranking to reach number 98. The USF School of Law was 14th in the magazine's separate diversity rankings. In addition, USF's part-time JD program ranked 28th out of 86 schools in the magazine's first listing of part-time programs. USF students' average LSAT score ranked 13th among students in all part-time programs.
- From 1912 to 2009, the USF School of Law has seen 266 of its graduates become state or federal judges.
- As of the fall semester of 2009, the School of Law enrolled 727 students in its Juris Doctor (J.D.) and Masters of Laws (LL.M.) programs.

- The University of San Francisco School of Law ranked in the top 10 law schools for Hispanics in the nation for 2009, as determined by Hispanic Business magazine. The law school, which ranked as the sixth best law school for Hispanics, is among of the most diverse law programs in the country, with students of color comprising approximately 36 percent of the 2009 entering class.
- Determined to document alleged human rights abuses and rule-of-law violations by the U.S. at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, Peter Jan Honigsberg, professor and director of legal research and writing at the University of San Francisco's School of Law, began conducting video taped interviews of former detainees of the military detention center there in January 2010.
- Richard Leo, School of Law professor, won a Guggenheim Fellowship to work on his book, The Innocence Revolution, a history of the founding of the Innocence Project and the consequential exoneration of hundreds of wrongly convicted U.S. prisoners as a result of DNA evidence.
- The USF's School of Law was listed among the top tier law schools in the U.S. News & World Report, and was ranked among the top 10 law schools in the nation for Hispanics in 2009, 2010, and 2011 by Hispanic Business Magazine.
- In 2011, USF School of Law was named one of the most diverse law schools by The National Jurist magazine. From the 45 schools listed, USF ranked number 12 for percentage of minority faculty.
